Summary

- Main entry: New York World's Fair 1939 and 1940 Incorporated
- Title: New York World's Fair 1939 and 1940 Incorporated Records, 1935-1945 (bulk 1936-1940)
- Size: 1183.75 linear feet
2508 boxes (AB: 2191; RC: 16; OS: 64; Card boxes: 160; Negative boxes: 77); 42 volumes; 18 tubes; 10 sound recordings
- Source: Donated by New York World's Fair 1939-1940 Incorporated in 1940.
- Abstract: The New York World's Fair of 1939 and 1940, was held in Flushing Meadows in the Borough of Queens. The non-profit Fair corporation was formed in 1935 under the guidance of business and civic leaders, and financed through federal, state, municipal and private funds. The Fair commemorated the 150th anniversary of Washington's inauguration in New York City and took "Building the World of Tomorrow" as its central theme. Participants included close to 60 nations, 33 states and U.S. territories, and over a thousand exhibitors, among them some of the largest corporations in the United States. The records of the New York World's Fair 1939 and 1940 Incorporated present a comprehensive view of all aspects of the Fair including construction, maintenance and demolition of Fair facilities; planning and development; architecture and landscaping; displays and exhibits; government participation; publicity and public relations; amusements, entertainment and concessions; legal and financial affairs; the import and export of goods; labor relations; and public safety and welfare. In addition to correspondence and memoranda, the collection consists of reports, minutes, financial and legal records, architectural plans, design drawings, sound recordings, brochures, leaflets, press releases and other promotional materials, notably over 12,000 photographs of the Fair, its exhibits and visitors.

Provenance note

The records of the New York World's Fair 1939-1940 Incorporated were donated to the New York Public Library at the close of the 1940 season. An agreement was brokered in 1936 by Frank Monaghan, head of the Fair's Research and Library Department, and endorsed by Grover Whalen, president of the NYWF and H.M. Lydenberg, director of the NYPL. In the waning months of the Fair, final arrangements were made for the acquisition by the Library of over 1,500 linear feet of records, printed matter and other materials. Between the fall of 1940 and spring of 1941 the records were surveyed and, under the supervision of Madeleine Hill Truslow of the Fair's Central Files unit, the bulk of the material was reviewed and transferred.

A working inventory of the Fair records was prepared in 1960 for the New York World's Fair 1964-1965 Corporation (which made extensive use of the records) by Truslow who was engaged to establish a system for the coming Fair based along the lines of the 1939/40 Central Files structure. A more comprehensive inventory, along with brief descriptions of the departmental records, was created by archivist John Stinson in 1985 as part of a Manuscripts and Archives Division-wide National Endowment for the Humanities-funded accessioning project. "The Last Fair on Earth: The New York World's Fair 1939/1940," a 1989 exhibition commemorating the 50th anniversary of the Fair, was held at the NYPL in the Edna Barnes Salomon Room and curated by Richard M. Salvato.

In 2006, the NYPL was the recipient of another grant from the NEH for a two and a half-year project to preserve and enhance access to the records of the New York World's Fair 1939-1940 Incorporated. This project significantly expanded the finding aid and provided for the creation of an electronically searchable digital version of the Central Files card index. Funding for the latter was also provided by the D.S. and R.H. Gottesman Foundation. In the course of the project, over 12,000 promotional prints were digitized and are now available through the NYPL's Digital Gallery.

Historical note

The New York World's Fair of 1939 and 1940, held in Flushing Meadows in the Borough of Queens, is widely regarded as the most spectacular exposition ever held in the United States. By every measurement – size, cost, attendance, publicity, foreign government participation, number of exhibitors – it outranked every previous international fair. With 45 million visitors during its two seasons, the Fair was the best-attended event of the first half of the 20th century. Participation was unprecedented with close to 60 foreign nations, 33 states and U.S. territories, and over a thousand exhibitors, among them some of the largest corporations in the United States. A massive promotional campaign was waged across the country and around the world, with hundreds of programs and events attracting widespread media coverage. New York had not hosted a world's fair since the Crystal Palace exhibition of 1853 and the New York World's Fair planners were committed, according to one internal report, "to the building of the greatest international exposition in history."¹

The success of Chicago's 1933 Century of Progress exposition persuaded many that a fair in New York would stimulate local trade and industry long dampened by the lingering effects of the Great Depression. In the summer of 1935, leaders of New York City's civic and business community formed a preliminary steering committee to explore the possibility of mounting a world's fair in New York. While such a venture would be expensive (the overall cost would ultimately climb to over $155 million), the expectation was that visitors to a fair would send billions of dollars flowing through the New York City economy. As a result of the committee's deliberations, a proposal was formally announced and received an enthusiastic reception from public and commercial interests. In October 1935, the New York World's Fair 1939 Incorporated, a non-profit membership corporation, was formed. It included over one hundred charter members drawn from the leaders of New York's business, financial, artistic, and professional communities. Principal officers of the Corporation included Grover A. Whalen (President), Bayard F. Pope (Treasurer), George McAneny (Chairman of the Board), Percy S. Straus (Chairman of the Committee on Architecture and Physical Planning), Harvey D. Gibson (Chairman of the Finance Committee), Howard A. Flanigan (Assistant to the President and later Executive Vice President), W. Earle Andrews (General Manager), and John P. Hogan (Chief Engineer).

The Fair was the result of a close and complex collaboration between private investors and local, state, federal and foreign governments, with New York City donating $26.7 million to the Fair, the federal government $3 million, New York State $6.2 million, and foreign governments over $30 million. The Fair issued $27,829,500 in bonds backed by receipts from admission and rentals to concessionaires and exhibitors, and promised a yield of four-percent interest due in 1941. These were sold to businesses, unions and members of the public eager to reap a profit from the enterprise. State and federal cooperation was facilitated by the creation of the New York State World's Fair Commission and the United States World's Fair Commission. It was agreed that all profits would be dedicated to the construction of Flushing Meadows Park, to occupy the site following the closing of the Fair -- a commitment secured by then-New York City Parks Commissioner Robert Moses.

Physical construction of the Fair began in the spring of 1936 with the enactment of enabling legislation permitting the reclamation of 1,216 ½ acres of tidal swamp -- chiefly occupied by a colossal city dump. Seven-million cubic acres of meadow mat and refuse were moved and leveled, and marshland filled in advance of the construction of the Fairgrounds; a feat still considered one of the largest land reclamations undertaken in the eastern United States. Following the clearance of the site and over the course of two years, thousands of architects, engineers, designers, artists, contractors, and trades people were mobilized, round the clock, to transform the Corona Dump into the New York World's Fair. The rapid construction of a virtual city complete with buildings, roads and lakes was only interrupted by the recurrent labor disputes and strikes that threatened the scheduled opening of the Fair and cost the corporation millions of dollars in overtime required to make up for time lost during stoppages. In conjunction with the Fair, several other large-scale projects that re-shaped New York City and the outlying area were undertaken, including highways and boulevards leading to the Flushing Meadow site, the Bronx-Whitestone Bridge, subway and railroad extensions, and LaGuardia Airport.

The corporation, like the fairgrounds, grew rapidly. By the spring of 1936 the core administrative staff was in place and operating from temporary offices in the Empire State Building in advance of a move to permanent headquarters at the Fairgrounds. In the years leading up to the Fair, the corporate staff would swell to an estimated 8,000 individuals working in close to three-dozen organizational units. While hierarchical reporting lines were established and numerous organizational charts issued, the corporation exhibited a remarkable fluidity of structure as members of the staff, often working across departmental lines, strove to bring the many aspects of the Fair to fruition.

The Board of Design under Stephen F. Voorhees, president of the American Institute of Architects, was responsible for the layout and overall appearance of the Fair, establishing standards for all buildings, murals, sculptures, lighting, and landscaping. Robert D. Kohn, eminent New York architect and progressive planner, accepted responsibility for defining the main theme. The Fair was scheduled to open on April 30, 1939, the 150th anniversary of George Washington's inauguration in New York City; but while the Fair paid tribute to the past, the uplifting theme, "Building the World of Tomorrow," emphasized the promise of the future. A press release issued by the Corporation articulated its progressive goals: "The Fair will exhibit the most promising developments of ideas, products, services and social factors of the present day in such a fashion that the visitor may get a vision of what he could obtain for himself, and for his community, by intelligent, co-operative planning toward the better life of the future."

In order to integrate the thematic elements with the built environment, the Fair was divided into seven sectors or zones: amusement, communication, community interests, food, government, production and distribution, and transportation. Most zones had a Fair-sponsored focal exhibit offering an overview of the sector's theme and interpreting the social significance of the participants' displays located in that area. At the hub of these sectors stood the Trylon, a 700-foot obelisk, and the Perisphere, a 200-foot globe, the symbols of the Fair. The Perisphere contained "Democracy," the Fair's central thematic exhibit, a scale model of an imaginary metropolis of the future, designed by American industrial designer Henry Dreyfuss.

With the transformation of Flushing Meadows in full swing, President Roosevelt responded to a resolution of Congress and, in November 1936, invited the participation of the nations of the world. A major hurdle was cleared when the International Bureau of Expositions, the governing body of international fairs, granted formal recognition of the anticipated New York fair. Fair president Grover Whalen, a consummate and energetic promoter, traveled across the world gathering commitments from an unprecedented number of foreign governments. With the exception of Germany and China, Whalen signed every major country in the world, scoring a significant coup by securing a pledge from Stalin that the Soviet Union would construct a $4 million pavilion. While this imposing pavilion would earn revenue for the Fair, it provoked the displeasure of some members of the public who considered the dominant structure to be a political taunt; complaints were lodged that the statue of a Soviet worker holding a star aloft mounted high atop a 180-foot pylon threatened to exceed the height of the American flag that flew over the Fairgrounds.

The forward-looking theme and significant government participation helped to persuade a host of American corporations -- eager to introduce new products to the public -- to lease space from the Fair. Many of these exhibits proved to be both powerful promotional tools and among the most popular attractions at the Fair. Notable corporate exhibitions included the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, where long distance phone calls could be placed for free; the Borden Company, which offered demonstrations of an electronically-operated milking machine (the rotolactor); the Westinghouse Company, featuring corporate mascots Elektro and Sparko -- a mechanical man and his dog; and General Motor's "Futurama," which offered a birds-eye view of the world of the highways, cities and suburbs of 1960 as imagined by industrial designer Norman Bel Geddes.

The amusement zone drew visitors to the Fair as well and helped the corporation to earn additional income through admission fees charged by selected concessionaires, a percentage of which was paid out to the Fair. Billy Rose's Aquacade was the undisputed hit of the amusement zone. This water show, which featured Olympic champions Eleanor Holm and Johnny Weismuller and a cast (according to promotional literature) of “fetching mermaids and virile mermen,” earned Rose an estimated five million dollars. Although Whalen had early on promised that the Fair would be free of “fan dancing” or lewd “girlie shows,” the potential loss of lucrative attractions produced a more lenient position towards entertainments featuring nudity and exotic dancing. While this altered stance generated controversy, burlesque shows helped rent space in the amusement zone and brought in paying visitors craving something other than culture and education. Salvador Dali’s Dream of Venus, Norman Bel Geddes’ Crystal Lassies and the Cavalcade of Centaurs -- featuring scantily clad or naked women in tanks of water, refracted in mirrors or bare-breasted on horseback -- were among the attractions that drew criticism and crowds.

Although more than 25 million paying visitors attended the Fair during the 1939 season, attendance fell far short of the projected 50 million that was needed to repay investors. Operating costs far outpaced expected income and, by August, the Fair was facing bankruptcy. The blame was laid on construction costs that exceeded budgeted funds; the 75-cent admission fee -- 25 cents more than the standard fee for fairs; and the excessive pomp -- parades for visiting dignitaries, elaborate ceremonies and lavish receptions -- which acted as a deterrent, in the words of one Fair official, “[to] the common run of people ...ill at ease rubbing elbows [with] ...the high silk hat group.” With the Fair teetering on the brink of insolvency, the board of directors elected to extend the exposition for an additional year hoping to recoup losses incurred during the ’39 season.

Gone was the optimism of the first year with its message of better living through collective planning so carefully crafted by the Board of Design and the initial planners. With war spreading throughout Europe, a more pragmatic mood prevailed both in the administration of the Fair and across the country. A new theme was adopted for the second year, “For Peace and Freedom,” and with this signal change, came other alterations. The flash-and-dazzle Whalen was replaced as the chief executive of the Fair by the staid and no-nonsense Harvey D. Gibson, president of Manufacturers Trust Company and chair of the Fair’s Finance Committee. His first act was to slash the price of admission to 50 cents; a series of austerity measures that included staff reductions and consolidation of departments and functions followed. Hoping to bring in the “common run of people” -- people from small towns and rural regions of the country -- the Fair launched promotional campaigns, contests and new attractions that would recast the high concept exposition to project the aspect of, in Gibson’s words, “a super country fair.” As part of the transformation of the theme and folksy re-orientation, the 1940 Fair lost some of its international flavor. Moreover, the political situation overseas prevented the robust foreign participation of the previous year. Ten nations did not return including several under Nazi occupation, and the Soviet Union withdrew, dismantling its pavilion and leaving a 100,000 square foot vacant lot in the center of the Fairgrounds. In its stead, the site became the “American Common,” a performance venue given over to patriotic pageants and events celebrating democracy and American diversity.

The Fair closed on October 27, 1940 yielding its highest day of attendance of over 550,000 visitors. But overall attendance lagged far behind the 1939 season and while profits in the 1940 season did exceed expenses, it was not sufficient to wipe out the debts incurred the previous year. When all outstanding financial matters were settled, bond holders only received 40 cents on each dollar invested. Demolition, which under an agreement with the Park’s Department was to be carried out by the Fair Corporation, began the day after the gates of the 1940 Fair closed. The unwinding of the corporation and the dismantling of the Fairgrounds structures was overseen by Howard A. Flanigan. Asked whether he regretted this task he told an interviewer, “Isn’t it better to let it die while it’s still lovely, than to let it stand on and become shabby?” Over the next four years an ever dwindling staff managed matters related to the resolution of Fair business. The formal dissolution of the New York World’s Fair occurred in March 1943, but the corporation continued to function through the fall of 1945 (ten years after the boisterous launching of the enterprise) when lingering legal and financial affairs were quietly concluded by a staff of one operating from a desk at the offices of Manufacturers Trust.

The New York Times, reporting on the closing of the 1940 season, penned the following epitaph:

On the tombstone of the Flushing giant should be carved something like this: "Born, April 30, 1939. Passed away officially at midnight, October 27, 1940. A short life – and not always a merry one."It has been a fabulous history – one that undoubtedly will mellow and improve with age and recitation and will become part of American folk legend when the fairgoers of '39 and '40 tell it to their grandchildren in 1975.

Scope and content note

The records of the New York World's Fair 1939 and 1940 Incorporated present a comprehensive view of all aspects of the planning, design, execution, maintenance, and dismantling of the Fair. These records evidence both the functional organization, and the broad range of interactions with participating corporate and government representatives, investors, contractors, artists, planners, laborers, fairgoers and members of the public both in the United States and abroad. There are few events or transactions related to the realization of the Fair and its day-to-day operation not documented in some fashion in these records. These records also demonstrate the formidable marshalling of creative, financial, and promotional forces necessary to successfully launch this enterprise. Secondly, these records give testament to the times: the political, economic, social and cultural milieu within which the Fair was conceived and mounted.

The collection covers matters concerning construction, maintenance and demolition of Fair facilities; planning and development; architecture and landscaping; displays and exhibits; government participation; publicity and public relations; amusements, entertainment and concessions; legal and financial affairs; the import and export of goods; labor relations; and public safety and welfare. In addition to correspondence and memoranda, the collection consists of reports, minutes, financial and legal records, architectural plans, design drawings, audio recordings, brochures, leaflets, press releases and other promotional materials, notably over 12,000 photographs of the Fair, its exhibits and visitors.

The records are divided into the two distinct groups maintained by the Fair Corporation: Central Files and Departmental Files. The Central Files constitute one third of the collection and broadly document the activities and functions of the over two-dozen organizational units within the corporation. Documents in these files are indexed at the item level by name and subject and can be retrieved by utilizing the Central Files index (see the Central Files Scope Note for information on the index, now available in searchable electronic form). Although staff was mandated by executive order to send all significant correspondence and memoranda to Central Files for reference or documentation purposes, departments did not always choose to comply, citing confidentiality or the necessity of keeping active records near at hand. Therefore, while a substantial portion of vital correspondence was maintained in Central Files, hundreds of feet of departmental records were never incorporated. These departmental records, which constitute the bulk of the collection, are arranged to reflect the organizational structure of the Fair at the close of the 1940 season. While duplication between Central Files and the departmental records does occur, more often, the two are complementary and together provide the most complete account of the organization's activities.

In addition to offering an exhaustive record of the Fair Corporation, the collection serves as a remarkable compendium of the times, offering entrée to almost every facet of American life, and supporting research on any number of subjects including: the birth of the consumer society and corporatism; the rise of the automobile culture; technology's transformation of the American home; the emergence of public relations as a profession and social force; the legacy of the New Deal; the influence of industrial design on everyday objects; urban and regional planning in 20th century America; the transformation of New York City instigated by Robert Moses from the 1930s forward; representations of race in popular culture; tensions between nationalism and internationalism in the United States; foreign participation and geopolitics; the history of burlesque and other popular entertainments; the evolution of museum didactics and display techniques; the introduction of foreign cuisines to the American public; labor relations and the rising sway of unions; the advent of mass travel and the tourism industry; and the history of other fairs and international expositions, most notably Chicago's Century of Progress, which served in many ways as a model for the New York fair.

The successful mounting of the Fair required the involvement of thousands of individuals both prominent and obscure -- from incorporators and planners to stenographers and stuntmen. Consequently, the records are an ideal source for biographers and genealogists. While the collection in no small measure reveals the aspirations of the political, cultural, business, and civic leaders that financed, planned and built the Fair, the extensive correspondence from members of the public poignantly captures the anxieties of a nation still gripped by the Depression and poised on the brink of war.

I. Central Files

1082 boxes

The Central Files Department maintained the core administrative records of the New York World's Fair 1939 /1940 Corporation and served as a vital resource to the hundreds of executives and administrators responsible for the day-to-day operation of the Fair. With few exceptions, the over two-dozen organizational units were required to file significant correspondence and memoranda in Central Files for reference or documentation purposes. Only materials deemed to be of a confidential nature or constituting part of the working records of a department were withheld and maintained within departmental files. At the peak operating period, the eleven employees who staffed the Central Files unit received and managed thousands of documents a week.

Correspondence sent to Central Files was classified, indexed, filed by subject and then cross-referenced by name of individual and organization in an alphabetically-arranged Master Card Index. The card index both facilitated rapid retrieval and guided the clerical staff in the classification and indexing of the steady influx of new documents. The files were arranged by the Fair employees according to a hierarchically-structured, decimal-based classification system that at the highest level, divided into five major units under the headings of Administration, Construction, Maintenance, Participation, Public Relations. This original filing scheme -- which offers insights into the Fair's office management practices and serves as a model of mid-twentieth century recordkeeping systems -- has been preserved along with an electronic version of the card index providing item-level access to well over one million documents. See Using the Central Files guide for instructions on searching and using the index.

There is some overlap of topics between the five main sections of files, so reading all of the descriptive notes and reviewing the classification scheme are essential steps for locating all the materials related to a given topic, even when using the index.

Dates in parentheses were assigned during processing and indicate whether documents pertain to the 1939 or the 1940 season of the Fair. The expression of the dates serves as a surrogate to the colored-coded filing labels employed by the Central File staff to distinguish between the two seasons. Material concerning the 1939 season includes documents that have a date range of 1935-1939. All other dates that appear in the box and folder list reflect those assigned by the NYWF staff. Following Central Files departmental practices, folders are arranged in reverse chronological order with later dated material preceding earlier dated material.

Series I.A. Administration (A.)

128 boxes

This section contains material related to the formation and financing of the Corporation and its functional organization and structure; the internal management, duties and responsibilities of the various divisions, departments and organizational units; the coordination of activities between units; and information governing corporate policies and standards. In their totality, these records reflect the ever-evolving organizational structure, the changes in departmental mandates, and the shifting vision of Fair officials between the 1939 and 1940 seasons.

General information on the reclamation of the Corona dump for the Fair ground site, the origins of the Corporation, along with narrative reports and statistical fact sheets are available under the heading of Corporate History [A0.5]. The correspondence of NYWF President Grover Whalen, with its many letters from the public, captures the exuberance and expectancy in the run-up to the opening of the first season and also includes biographical sketches and clippings [A1.100, President]. Communications from Chairman of the Board Harvey D. Gibson, who replaced Whalen at the helm of the Fair for the 1940 season, is located throughout this section; some discrete files of his terse exchanges on cost-cutting can be found under the Board of Director's files [A1.000]. Information on the physical and thematic plan for the Fair and early formulations of the focal exhibits are filed under the heading of Board of Design [A1.13]. The Board's A to Z files contain correspondence between Stephen Voorhees (Chairman of the Board of Design), Robert Kohn (Chairman of the Committee on Theme) and architects and other Fair planners. Additional Kohn correspondence relates to the replacement of the Soviet Pavilion with the Fair-operated American Common exhibit for the 1940 season [A1.130 Committee on Theme]. Also here are photographs and reports on exhibit design and logistical information pertaining to the Paris Exposition. [Additional information on these topics can be found in the Construction and Public Relations sections of Central files].

Elsewhere meeting and conference files offer information about anticipated changes to the Fair from the 1939 to 1940 seasons, including the lowered price of admission; alteration of the theme; and development of amusements and exhibits with greater mass appeal [A1.1520, Exhibits Department]. The Progress Reports provide bi-weekly accounts of the planning and activities of many of the Fair's organizational units from the President's office down. Both statistical and narrative in content, these reports offer a concise review of the workings of the Fair at a departmental level [A1.14]. Finally, under the heading of Corporate Policies there are files related to decency protests documenting complaints against the "grind" shows and pervasive nudity in the Amusement Zone; appeals to Fair officials from individuals writing from Germany, Hungary, and Poland for assistance in obtaining entry visas to the United States; and a file titled Negro Policy detailing public protests stemming from the Fair's employment practices [A4].

Documents regarding the development of the Fairgrounds with emphasis upon its planning and design are filed under this heading. This correspondence and reports in this section chronicle the work of the architects, engineers, artists and industrial designers who shaped the total environment of the Fair. This section also contains extensive material related to the thematic content of the Fair, as well as preliminary studies detailing the conception and execution of the iconic Trylon and Perisphere structures of the Fair's Theme Center [C1.0, Design] and the seven focal zones developed by the Fair [C1.02, Focal Exhibits].

Among other materials to be found here are files on the Contemporary Art Exhibit, with extensive correspondence between Fair officials and artists submitting their work for display [C1.0114, Fine & Applied Arts]. Ernest Peixotto served as consultant for mural painting under the Board of Design and his correspondence addressing the selection of artists and discussions on content and style can be found under the heading of Murals [C1.6]. Information on the infrastructure of the Fairgrounds and the creation of roads, bridges and subway lines undertaken in conjunction with the Fair are also documented in this section [C3.0 - C3.85]; notable is Robert Moses' correspondence regarding the improvement of highways and the creation of the Grand Central Parkway extension [C3.403, Streets and Roads].

Series I.C. Maintenance (M.)

44 boxes

Items in this section address the general operation of the Fair, with special consideration of the upkeep and protection of property, as well as matters related to public safety and welfare during the Fair period. Included are New York City Department of Public Health Reports [Public Health, M1.0] addressing plumbing, food handlers, meat inspection, and insect control in the reclaimed marshland; files on the first aid stations, which treated sprains, heat exhaustion and gastric discomfort - the latter being the most frequent Fairground malady [Medical Services, M1.02]; fire protection procedures including transcripts of a hearing that took place to investigate a warehouse fire [Fire Protection, M1.10]; and the Lost and Found files dealing both with missing property and wayward children [M1.12].

The flow of vehicles and pedestrians through the Fair was a significant concern of Fair officials and discussions on how to alleviate congestion of walk-ways can be found under the heading of Intra-Mural Traffic [M1.42]. This unit of Central Files also contains material related to the closing of the Fair, including recommendations from the public about possible future uses for Flushing Meadow Park [M2., Demolition]; and information about the removal of sculptures and murals [M2.20, Sculpture; M2.21, Murals] can be found here.

Series I.D. Participation (P.)

482 boxes

The section documents the solicitation of and granting of rights to foreign and domestic governments, corporations, organizations and individuals to participate in the Fair as exhibitors, concessionaires, vendors, performers and amusement operators. The documents here address the proposal process, contract negotiations, approvals for design and construction, and the planning of special events. While the focus is chiefly on logistical issues surrounding participation, such as space rental, financial arrangements, and maintenance, these files also reveal aspects of the development of the thematic and artistic content of proposed and accepted exhibits and concessions.

Intimations of the unfolding conflict in Europe can be found in the files on Foreign participation including correspondence related to the status of the Czechoslovakian pavilion following that country's invasion by German troops in March, 1939. Files on Germany include letters of public protest responding to the rumored inclusion of a German pavilion, with similar outcry being raised over Soviet participation [P0.3, Foreign]. An extensive section under the heading of Fisheries covers efforts to solicit international participation from commercial and sporting sectors of the fishing and marine industries. There are files on hatcheries, pearl and shell manufacturing, diving and public education [P1.530, Fisheries].

Included under the heading of Amusements are proposals for exhibits, acts and other entertainments. These are well documented in the abundant publicity photographs, flyers and posters. Among these are rides, circus and vaudeville performances, musical reviews and pageants, minstrel shows and aerial acts. A dozen files titled Criticisms include correspondence from visitors registering complaints about vulgar shows, high prices and false advertising [P1.6, Amusements]. Material filed under D.W.F. documents Salvador Dali's "Dream of Venus" exhibit and includes an early proposal along with information on Dali's involvement with the project [P1.630, Side Shows]. Gathered under the heading of Freaks [P1.637] and suggestive of the financial desperation of the times is correspondence from individuals seeking payment to display their deformities or those of their children at the Fair. A section on Restaurants [P1.680] chiefly includes information on the leasing of space, construction, violations, repairs, and reports of public dissatisfaction.

A section headed Special Groups brings together files on women, veterans, fraternal orders, Jewish organizations, pacifists, youth groups, and trade unions. Files titled Negro Organizations [P3.1], with correspondence proposing Black organizational involvement and ethnic-based thematic exhibits, touch upon issues of segregation and discrimination. Special Events [P4.0] makes up more than a quarter of the Participation section. These files reflect the Fair's nationwide efforts to interest business organizations, civic associations, ethnic and cultural groups to tie conventions, reunions, and other celebrations to a visit to the Fair. Located in files headed Daily Programs are bulletins summarizing the schedule for all Special Events and Special Days for the 1939 season. The days were marked with musical and theatrical performances, fashion shows, animal acts, contests and parades. Notable here is information on the King and Queen of England's visit to the Fair; Japan Day, held in 1940 to promote smooth relations between Japan and the United States; Jewish Day, including correspondence protesting the use of the appellation Palestine to describe the proposed Zionist state; and internal memos recommending the rejection of the Young Communist League's request for a Special Day.

Series I.E. Public Relations (PR.)

321 boxes

Within this section is information regarding the means of promoting participation in the Fair and the stimulation of visitor attendance through the use of advertising, media outreach, publications, special events and publicity campaigns. Also included is information on earlier World's Fairs and international expositions gathered and utilized by the NYWF staff to guide them in their planning and organizational efforts [PR. and PR1.34]. Correspondence critical of the Fair, received from members of the public across the country addressing everything from the price of admission to the poor quality of the food, are located at the front of this section [PR.].

Information about the earliest efforts to solicit interest in the Fair can be found in the prospectus sent to government and business leaders outlining the aims of the proposed exposition [PR1.00, Prospectus]. Under the heading Insignia [PR1.11] is extensive correspondence from national and international businesses in every sector, requesting permission to manufacture or advertise products using the World's Fair name or logo. This section contains artifacts and samples including fabric swatches, decals, medallions, maps, postcards, product wrappers and novelty items. Information on the "Typical American Family" contest along with a variety of other competitions designed to promote the Fair including needlework, limerick, beauty, dance and poetry can found under the heading of Contests [PR1.2]. Speeches delivered by Grover Whalen, Robert Kohn and other Fair officials as well as a copy of Lewis Mumford's 1935 address at the Progressives for the Arts dinner articulating some of the defining thematic principles of the Fair are available under the heading Speeches [PR1.41] A nationwide series of publicity Good Will Tours was launched as part of pre-Fair promotional efforts, and regional perceptions of the anticipated Fair can be found in these files [PR1.7, Stunts & Ideas]. Finally, the wealth of material filed under Advisory Committees suggests the wide degree of input sought and received from business leaders and special interest groups for suggestions and recommendations on boosting interest in the Fair [PR2. to PR2.3].

II. Office of the Secretary

281 boxes, 16 volumes

The Office of Secretary was charged with keeping of all records necessary for the ongoing operation of the Fair Corporation; filing and proper recording of all contracts; preparing and distributing of calendars, minutes and Executive Orders; arranging for and sending out of notifications for meetings; the soliciting, receiving and opening of all public bids; and the signing of the debenture subscriptions and certificates underwriting the construction and mounting of the Fair. The Corporate Secretary and his staff also participated in the preparation of budgets and, with the Vice President in Charge of Finance, supervised expenditures. Following the 1940 season, and through the final dissolution of the Corporation in 1944, this staff assumed responsibilities for the liquidation of property, the settlement of accounts, and the management of outstanding claims. While Charles C. Green and later E.W. Cobb served as Corporate Secretary, the day-to-day duties were chiefly entrusted to Thomas Marrah, Mary Louise Jorzick and, during the post-Fair years, Edward Umgelter. [See also: Administration and Maintenance sections of Central Files].

Series II.A. Minutes

17.5 boxes

The minutes of Executive Committee, Board of Directors and Incorporators (the charter members of the Fair), document all major transactions associated with the financing, construction, operation and demolition of the Fair. The Board of Design minutes record the evolution of the thematic concept, the development of the physical environment of the Fair and the construction of pavilions and other structures. Information on the financial structuring of the Fair and the issuance of debentures is available in the early Finance Committee minutes and evidence of the broad range of promotional activities undertaken in the years leading up to the opening of the Fair is available in the Promotional Council minutes.

Sets of NYWF bound minutes are available in the MSS Reading Room as well as through GRD

Series II.B. Items for Board Review

17 boxes

These records include memos, correspondence, reports, draft contracts and architectural plans related to all matters that came before the Executive Committee for review. Although the resolution of all matters is summarized in the minutes, many of these documents provide background information and an expanded account of the issues. These materials also provide insight into the procedure that governed the way decisions were reached and actions taken by this body.

Series II.D. Contracts

193 boxes

The Office of Secretary maintained the official copy of record of all contracts and agreements executed by the NYWF Corporation. These contracts document the terms of agreement between the Fair and the many outside individuals, businesses, organizations and governmental agencies that participated as exhibitors, concessionaires, vendors, performers and amusement operators.

The Office of Secretary staff logged and filed all contracts in serial number order together with correspondence, change orders and other supporting documents. The arrangement of the contracts here reflects that order. Distinct contract numbers were assigned by the Legal Department in the course of drafting agreements (e.g. C-224, M-38, X-41). Where available, both serial and contract numbers are expressed.

III. Board of Design

12 boxes, 18 tubes

Under the supervision of Stephen Voorhees, the seven-member Board of Design was assembled in May 1936 to prepare the general plan for the Fair. Made up of building and landscape architects drawn from New York's leading firms, an industrial designer, and a New York City Park's Department engineer, the Board was responsible for the physical layout of the site and the realization of the thematic elements. A sub-unit of the Board, the Committee on Theme, was led by architect and progressive planner Robert Kohn and charged with actualizing the conceptual aspects of the Fair -- the interpretation and integration of the main theme with the built environment and the development of the Fair-sponsored focal exhibits. Members of the Board recommended and selected all architects to carry out the design of Fair Corporation structures including, administrative buildings, concession kiosks, the seven focal exhibits, and the Theme Center structures of Tylon and Perisphere. Building designs prepared by outside architects for concessionaires, exhibitors, and government participants had to conform to established standards of scale and color and meet with the approval of the Board in advance of construction. There were few matters related to the overall appearance of the Fair that did not come before this body: sculptures, murals, lighting, color, landscaping, décor and signage all passed before the Board for comment and consent.

Although some textual materials related to the design of uniforms can be found in this record group, the bulk of the abundant documentation of the Board of Design's activities can be found in the reports, memos and correspondence that were integrated into the Administration and Construction sections of Central Files. A set of Board of Design minutes is also available in the records of the Office of Secretary. (See: Office of Secretary: Administrative and Advisory Bodies, boxes 1097-8). The records arranged here chiefly constitute what remains of the Board of Design drawings and plans for the Fair. Correspondence between the Fair Corporation and the NYPL dating from the acquisition of the collection indicates that most of the architectural drawings were destroyed or dispersed. Although fragmentary in nature, the hundreds of design drawings and plot plans in these records capture the early musings of the designers as they established the layout and look of the Fair. Included are original drawings on butter paper, graphite and colored pencil on tracing paper, presentation drawings on board as well as photostatic copies.

Representative materials include quick sketches and development drawings of the Fairgrounds site drafted by Kohn and others on the Board of Design demonstrating efforts to devise a plan that would reconcile the thematic and aesthetic vision with the engineering realities of building on reclaimed marsh land (colored pencil on tracing paper). Various iterations of the final plan can also be found here. Also included are site plans of other Fairs -- Buffalo (1901), Brussels (1935), Chicago (1893 and 1933), St. Louis (1904), San Francisco (1915) and Paris (1937) -- utilized by the designers in the course of their research. Proposed plans for permanent improvement to Flushing Meadows Bay and drawings pertaining to the development of Flushing Meadow Park following the closure of the Fair address the long-term prospects for this site.

Among the drawings of buildings are studies of the focal exhibits and design drawings of individual Town of Tomorrow model homes. Presentation materials include a distemper painting of the Pabst Blue Ribbon Beer Garden entrance and bandstand; a lithograph of the Aviation building; and a water color of the Production and Distribution Building. Exhibit and display drawings include diagrams coordinating the elements for fireworks and fountain spectacles. Files on ground structures include numerous design and presentation drawings for the concessions and refreshment stands that dotted the Fairgrounds. Plot plans offer schematic layouts of the zones and sectors of the Fair while renting plans note plot numbers, rentable square footage of sectors and buildings, and anticipated circulation figures. Presentation diagrams and tables offer graphic representations of the thematic content of the Fair. Progress logs tracking the development of sculptures and murals from inception to completion are also available in these records. Transportation drawings contain sketches of entrance gates at the IRT/BMT station and platform (colored pencil on tracing paper). Notable is a drawing by Walter Dorwin Teague of a Pullman car emblazoned with a NYWF logo. Finally, design materials on uniforms contain reports and correspondence as well as swatches, photographs of uniformed employees, and design drawings including a water-color representation of a whimsical Trylon and Persphere hat.

Additional presentation material related to the design of the grounds, buildings and exhibitions were donated at the closing of the Fair to Columbia University's Avery Architecture and Fine Arts Library and the Museum of the City of New York Archives and are available for study at these institutions.

IV. Legal Department

92 boxes

In 1936, the Fair Corporation retained the firm of Lord Day & Lord as General Counsel to negotiate the lease of Flushing Meadow Park from the City of New York. The firm, represented by Herbert Brownell, Jr., thereafter managed all legal matters for the Fair. Routine activities included preparing the debenture issue, pursuing local and federal legislation, drafting and executing construction and concessions contracts, and protecting against misuse of the Fair's copyrighted name and insignia. Counsel also litigated claims by and against the Fair, negotiated labor disputes, advised department heads on policies and procedures, researched tax and import matters, reviewed demolition specifications and financial papers and, in 1942, executed the dissolution of the Fair Corporation itself. Staff attorneys J. T. Noonan, James S. Hemingway and C.W. Merritt assisted Brownell. The records in this group include correspondence, leases, depositions, opinions, contracts and case records and reflect the breadth of matters handled by the department.

Series IV.B. Amusements, Exhibits and Concessions

8.5 boxes

These records represent Counsel's work on all phases of the financing, contracting and operation of exhibits, shows, attractions, food services and merchandise concessions at the Fair. The records evidence the legal team's role in the proposal and bid review process, in establishing policy and negotiating financial arrangements, and in drafting contracts and monitoring compliance. Concessions files include reports on the regulation of palm reading, dog racing and striptease acts. Special Events files document an attempt by the USSR to shut down a Ukrainian-American folk program. The records also contain information about unrealized and aborted ventures, including plans for an international arts festival; negotiations to procure the Dionne Quintuplets for display; and the Fair's refinancing and takeover of the Sun Valley concession.

These records largely concern the involvement of city agencies in monitoring and regulating activities on the Fairgrounds. Documents include building permits, licenses and reports on ordinances and legislation. Demolition and Flushing Meadow Park files contain news clippings concerning the salvage of Fair steel for defense purposes. Records throughout this section detail ongoing lease disputes between the Fair and Parks Department Commissioner Robert Moses.

Files here document the development of design standards and setting up of bidding and contracting policies and procedures for construction and demolition work at the Fair site. Records also deal with issues of compliance, including health code violations and policies for contracting foreign architects. Demolition files include a chart of sculptures to be demolished or returned to artists. Construction Pre-Qualification Board Minutes are located in the Office of Secretary record group (see: Office of Secretary: Administrative and Advisory Bodies, box 1097).

These records represent the department's work to establish and maintain the legal structures within which the Corporation conducted its financial affairs. Files document the issuance of the debenture and efforts to attract business and industry participation. Bond issue correspondence includes a letter faulting the Fair for racial prejudice in its hiring practices. Bank materials provide information regarding the process of using debenture subscriptions to secure a $3.5 million loan. General Counsel's Bills for Services provide summaries and details of all activities conducted by the Legal Department throughout its years of operation. Dissolution of the Fair files contain information regarding outstanding business matters, including the initiation of bankruptcy proceedings and debenture pay-outs.

Series IV.F. Government Participation

11 boxes

These records concern the financing, planning and construction of the Federal and New York State buildings, the process of obtaining state and federal legislation and financing, and the functional operation of state and foreign pavilions. The New York State World's Fair Commission file includes a report on the serious cost overruns on construction of the amphitheatre. State and country documents primarily relate to matters of space rental, construction and demolition, and the regulation of restaurants and foreign workers. While yielding little information about the substance of government exhibits or programs, the files occasionally, if obliquely, evidence the mark of world affairs upon Fair business. Examples include a form letter indicating the German takeover of a Jewish firm in Czechoslovakia and correspondence concerning large numbers of unemployment claims made by former employees of the Hungary and USSR pavilions. Germany's file, while brief, tracks the status of the prospective inclusion of a German pavilion at the Fair from contract negotiations through the country's ultimate cancellation of plans to participate.

Series IV.G. Liens, Claims and Litigation

24.5 boxes

Records comprise correspondence, affidavits, depositions, subpoenas and other papers documenting Counsel's work to address legal claims against and by the Fair, with index cards summarizing claims' substance and status. Claimants range from concessionaires and former employees to individuals demanding compensation for having originated various Fair design elements, terminology and themes. The largest lawsuit was by Franham Distributors, Inc. for $1,000,000 in lost revenues after the Fair rejected the company's bid for the hot dog and hamburger concession. Other concessionaires represented here sued for breach of contract regarding exclusive sale or show rights, lack of services, property damage or delayed openings. The earliest and probably most publicized claim was made by Joseph Shadgen, a former employee who professed to have been the first to suggest a Fair be held in Flushing Meadow to celebrate the sesquicentennial of Washington's inauguration. Claims were made by the Fair against concessionaires for outstanding royalties and utility payments, unpaid space rental, and against construction firms for breaches of contract. The General file includes New York State subpoenas for Fair staff to appear before the "Temporary Commission on the Condition of the Urban Colored Population."

Series IV.H. Promotions, Rights and Merchandising

19 boxes

These files document the legal work undertaken to protect the Fair's copyrights, patents and trademarks, as well as to generate income through licensing Fair-related merchandise. Records here also pertain to the promotional endeavor to lend the Fair's name, themes and insignia to businesses for advertising, contests and other uses. Answers to Plans and Schemes largely comprises correspondence with those introducing ideas for the Fair's consideration, and work done to indemnify the Fair against claims. Materials here include research reports, designs and proposals, such as "The Land of Utopia," an attraction showcasing "an entirely new and novel social order." Examples in Approval of Material include a brochure advertising Royal's "Typewriter of Tomorrow" and the Encyclopedia Britannica booklet, "Fairs of the Past--Fairs of Tomorrow." Unauthorized Use of Corporate Name files reflect the emergence of an opportunistic culture seeking to profit from a connection with the Fair. Publications, photographs, transcripts and correspondence evidence the phenomenon. Examples include reports of a man masquerading as a Fair official; photographs of a "World's Fair Hat Shop" and other local businesses; and a Young Communist League flyer employing the phrase "World of Tomorrow" and the Tylon and Perisphere insignia.

Series IV.I. Housing, Public Services and Transportation

4 boxes

Housing files document the licensing of official Fair housing establishments, as well as documenting illegal business activities attempting to capitalize on an association with the Fair. Public Safety files contain regulations; arrest reports, summonses and violations; research on police activity at Chicago's Century of Progress Exposition; and the Boy Scout manual, "Safety in the World of Tomorrow." Medical Department files include reports on workers compensation and how to handle fatalities at the Fair. Transportation files concern the contracting and operation of Fairgrounds parking and intra-mural services. Exposition Greyhound files include a schedule of pending tort cases.

V. Office of the Executive Vice President

7 boxes

Howard Adams Flanigan, a decorated U.S. Naval officer, retired his commission to join the Fair Corporation in the capacity of Administrative Assistant to President Grover Whalen in May 1936. Known as Commander by the over 8,000 employees who made up the staff during the peak operating period, Flanigan acted on behalf of the president in organizational matters and was charged with the coordination of the activities of all departments. Following the resignation of General Manager W. Earle Andrews, who was responsible for planning, site development, and general oversight of the Operating Division, Flanigan assumed the additional duties of this position. The Office of Executive Vice President was established with Flanigan at its helm during an organizational restructuring at the end of the 1939 season. At the closing of the Fair, Flanigan managed its operational and physical dismantling, overseeing the demolition of buildings at Flushing Meadow, the sale and salvage of Fair property, and negotiations with city, state and federal authorities. In June 1941, Flanigan was recalled by the Navy to active service and his duties were absorbed by the remaining staff in the Office of Secretary.

The modest number of files under this heading belies Flanigan's far-ranging activities as Executive Vice President. The bulk of his extensive records may be found dispersed throughout Central Files and the many departments and units that constitute the Operating Division including Concessions, Construction, Exhibits and Entertainment, Public Services and Labor Relations. The documents here relate primarily to Flanigan's post-Fair activities, particularly with regard to demolition plans and negotiations with the New York City Parks Department. Many of these files were generated in response to Parks Commissioner Robert Moses' letter of September 27, 1940, in which he delineated the Fair Corporation's obligations to the City. Materials include an illustrated Parks' Department booklet requesting funds for the development of Flushing Meadow Park; Flanigan's confidential bulletins to the Fair's Executive Committee related to the progress of demolition, sales and salvage, personnel reductions, operating finances, and issues regarding concessionaires with claims against or in debt to the Fair. Finally, files reflecting Flanigan's activity during the Fair period include a Federal Works Agency report on plans for the 1940 Contemporary Arts building, and documentation regarding the Chicago office opened to promote the Fair in the Midwest.

VI. Government Participation

65 boxes

This division secured commitments from foreign and domestic governments and coordinated all activities with foreign officials and federal and civic leaders related to bringing the construction and operation of governmental exhibits and pavilions to fruition. Fair President Grover Whalen officially directed the activities of this division, serving as the Corporation's front man and indefatigable emissary. Traveling extensively to visit with presidents, prime ministers, governors and other dignitaries, Whalen was present at virtually all formal contract signings, and countless promotional and ceremonial events. It was, however, Julius C. Holmes who effectively led the division, overseeing the day-to-day management and operation of the Foreign, State and Ceremonial Departments. Hired initially with the title of Administrative Assistant, Holmes became Division Director and Vice President late in 1939 as preparations for the 1940 season were underway.

Related material on Government Participation can be found in the following sections of the Central Files records:

- I.D. Participation - P0. Government
- I.A. Administration - A1.16 Government Participation Division

Series VI.A. Division Director

14 boxes

The files reflect the broad range of business that came before Holmes in his capacity as Division Director. While some of the correspondence is addressed to Whalen, most is addressed to and answered by Holmes. Included are records detailing European trips undertaken by Holmes and Chairman of the Board George McAneny securing participation commitments; promotional activities generated through the busy Paris office, outpost for the Fair Corporation overseas; failed negotiations with Canadian officials for the exhibition of the Dionne Quintuplets; and planning activities related to the British royal visit to the Fair. The files on foreign participation, with letters protesting the Italian, Spanish, and Soviet pavilions, and visa requests from individuals seeking entry to the United States suggest the unfolding conflict in Europe. The Washington files include information on legislative acts passed to facilitate the operation of the Fair, and extensive correspondence with Sol Bloom -- Congressional representative from New York and Director and United States Commissioner of the New York World's Fair. Additional correspondence from New York Representative Hamilton Fish includes expressions of concern that the Fair was not placing enough emphasis on "patriotic demonstrations."

Series VI.B. Foreign Participation Department

29 boxes

The staff in this department was charged with matters pertaining to the participation of over 55 nations. Under the leadership of retired naval officer Admiral William H. Standley, Fair representatives traveled to Europe, Central and South America, Asia and the Far East visiting with foreign ministers and consuls general. They coordinated meetings for Grover Whalen, cemented commitments and finalized agreements. Standley, in addition to his supervisory duties, was engaged to explore the development of Flushing Bay as a commercial and recreational port and to pursue the possible ceremonial presence at the Fairgrounds of foreign naval and air force units. In the spring of 1939, Standley became Foreign Participation Consultant and Edward F. Roosevelt the departmental director.

VI.B.2. Countries

13.5 boxes

These files include extensive correspondence between foreign officials and Fair representatives. While many document construction, contractual, financial and procedural matters, some do address the planning, design and thematic content of the exhibits and pavilions. Although the Corporation attempted to create a vision of harmonious relations among the participating nations, documents in these files reveal the cultural, political and social tensions that often percolated beneath the surface, requiring the deft negotiation of Fair personnel. The files on Germany, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Palestine and the USSR are among those that give evidence of conflict and controversy.

VI.B.3. International Centennial Stamp Exhibit

2 boxes

A centenary exhibition commemorating the British issuance of the first postage stamp had long been planned for London by the Royal Philatelic Society, but when hostilities in Europe necessitated its cancellation, the Fair Corporation intervened and offered to sponsor the event in the British Pavilion during the 1940 season. The project came under the direction of Albin Johnson, one of the Fair's foreign representatives for European participation, and was administered by philatelist and stamp page editor for the New York World Telegram Ernest A. Kehr and his assistant Helen Weitzmann. The files cover the planning, promotion and realization of the exhibition.

Series VI.C. State Participation Department

18 boxes

Dennis Nolan led the State Participation Department and oversaw the activities of the its Commissioners. Like their counterparts in Foreign Participation, these Fair representatives were charged with promoting the Fair and securing commitments. Traveling across the country and to the U.S. territories, they met with governors, Chamber of Commerce officials and other civic leaders urging participation through exhibits and special events. The department records contain Commissioners' progress reports and correspondence; data sheets with information on regional contacts, natural resources and industries; negotiation on rental fees; research papers on the history of participation of states at past world fairs; and information on legislative bills and the allocation of funds.

Series VI.D. Ceremonials Department

4 boxes

Working in conjunction with Division Director Julius Holmes, Robert J. Cottrell served as director of the Ceremonials Department, making arrangements for special Fair functions and receptions for visiting dignitaries and heads of state. Documented are Cottrell's activities coordinating opening day ceremonies, planning and programming of State and National days, and the facilitation of special events including the frequent luncheons and dinners for distinguished guests held at Perylon Hall. Criticism of these receptions --deemed by many associated with the cash-strapped Corporation to be excessively lavish-- can be found in Cottrell's memos.

VII. Operating Division

381 boxes, 13 volumes

The activities of this division came under the direction of the Office of Executive Vice President. See V. Office of the Executive Vice President for further explanation.

Series VII.A. Concessions

30 boxes

The Concessions Department, headed by Rowland P. Bardell, was responsible for the development, operation and oversight of all concessions on the fairgrounds. A restructuring later established the Amusements Department as a separate unit within the Operating Division, but before the Fair opened and for most of the 1939 Season the Amusement Control Committee (ACC) reported to Bardell. The Concessions Department retained responsibility for restaurants, food and merchandise stands, and "utilities" concessions, which referred to services such as Greyhound's intra-mural buses and the American Express-run guided tours. Records document a range of operational activities in correspondence with concessionaires, other departments and the public, and include licenses, policy memoranda, contracts, applications, proposals, minutes, letters of complaint and reports on finances, recommendations, rejections and inspections.

VII.A.1. Amusements

20 boxes

The Amusement Control Committee (ACC), chaired first by Jay Downer, then by H.M. (Howard Melvin) Lammers, guided the development of Amusement Zone concessions. In the fall of 1939, the ACC was renamed the Amusements Department, with George P. Smith and Frank Shean appointed co-directors. The department considered proposals, negotiated terms, and regulated and managed all rides, games, shows, attractions and villages in the Amusement Zone. Files cover central departmental activities, including the establishment and oversight of policies, procedures and regulations and the vetting of prospective concessionaires. Among other issues, these records reflect an array of contemporary social and political attitudes about sexuality, race, culture and leisure. Letters from the public complain of high prices, noise, false-advertising and the mistreatment of animals, with vehement protests against a proposed "bull-dodging" show. Morality and Nudity Issues files highlight the extensive and spirited public controversy over what some perceived as a preponderance of burlesque and adult entertainment attractions on the Fairway. Correspondence, memoranda, reports and clippings detail the outcry and the Fair's response, which included a commitment to more strictly regulate the area during the 1940 season. Proposals for attractions include those from established concerns, prominent personalities (including Norman Bel Geddes, George Jessel and Rube Goldberg) and first-time entrepreneurs. Large concessionaires included DuFour and Rogers, with six attractions, including Headless Olga and Nature's Mistakes (the Strange as it Seems file contains a piece describing the personal struggles of its "freaks"); and Frank Buck's Jungleland (including a news article about a shipment of Buck's animals perishing in a storm at sea). Games, Rides, Shows, and Attractions and Villages files detail the regulation and operation of concessions, often including blueprints, designs and promotional material.

VII.A.2. Food and Merchandise

10 boxes

These records were created by the Concessions Department in the course of conducting routine business. Files include analyses of proposals for restaurants, food and merchandise stands; abstracts of contracts; claims by and against concessionaires; and reports on compliance with sanitary, price and contractual stipulations. Many restaurant files contain menus, including those from foreign pavilions. These files also include inspection reports, seat counts, and records addressing sanitary violations, signage and customer complaints.

Series VII.B. Construction Department

186 boxes

Physical transformation of the 1,216 ½ -acre Flushing Meadow from municipal dump into fully realized fairground largely was overseen by administrators and staff of the Construction Department. Under an agreement with the City, the New York City Parks Department was responsible for basic improvements to the site and the surrounding area, as well as grading and preparation -- moving and leveling an estimated 7-million cubic yards of ashes, refuse and tidal marsh deposits. But it was the Fair Corporation that was entrusted with the development of the site, the building of structures and paths, and performing all tasks related to landscaping, lighting and sanitation.

The early construction activities were directed by the General Manager's Office under the guidance of W. Earle Andrews [see Office of Vice President scope note]. Working in conjunction with the Board of Design, this unit developed the general site plan and supervised load testing and the erecting of test structures. By December 1936, the Construction Department was formally established and mobilized. Construction was carried out both by contractors and the Fair's own forces. Chief Engineer and Director of Construction John P. Hogan, a decorated World War I veteran and a colonel in the US Army Corp of Engineers, likened the department's operation to "an expeditionary force of an army in the field." Thousands of engineering and construction workers converged on the site in the summer of 1937, and for the next two years -- working around the clock -- these forces were deployed to build a virtual city; a feat requiring the construction of hundreds of structures, two lakes, a network of fountains, terminals for subway and bus transportation, bridges, roads and other infrastructure.

VII.B.1. Engineering Records

178 boxes

These records primarily document pre-Fair engineering and construction matters and address technical issues related to site preparation, laying of foundations and the erecting of superstructures; development of infrastructures for transportation and utilities; and installation of plumbing, heating, mechanical and electrical systems. Included are meeting minutes; construction plans and detail drawings; correspondence and memos addressed to and from Hogan and his assistants; consultants' and technical reports; background research on the construction and engineering aspects of previous fairs; records related to labor-related issues; articles and speeches prepared by Fair engineers; and daily labor reports -- concise typewritten summaries of construction activities for each day from 1936 through the opening of the 1939 season.

Files related to the participants' buildings most often address general contracting and labor management concerns and, for the most part, offer little of substance in the way of architectural design or exhibition content. However, files associated with the Fair-built structures (most particularly the Theme Center structures) often yield information on design and display elements. Theme Center records include an analysis of the structural stability of the Perisphere; architects Harrison and Foulhoux's report on methods and materials of construction; and information on the fabrication of "Democracity," the Theme Center show that took place inside the Perisphere. These departmental records also document the flow of work between the Fair staff and the many architects, contractors, consultants, and vendors that participated in the construction of the Fair. Additionally they illuminate the relationship between the Fair staff and officials from City agencies, particularly the New York City Parks Department and its then Commissioner, Robert Moses.

Series VII.B.2. Documentation Photographs

8 boxes

Documentation photographs were utilized by the architectural and engineering staff to track construction progress, as well as by the Promotion and Development Division for placement in newspapers and other publications. These photographs capture the reclamation of Flushing Meadow, the creation of the tidal gate and other permanent improvements, and the construction of bridges, buildings and all other Fairgrounds structures. There are numerous views of the Trylon and Perisphere under construction including those of the massive structural-steel skeleton rising up in the center of the Fairgrounds.

Series VII.C. Exhibits and Entertainment

80 boxes

Under this heading are the administrative records of several departments responsible for developing and managing Fair-sponsored programs, events or exhibitions.

VII.C.1. American Common

4 boxes

For the Fair's 1940 season, themes of patriotism and national unity replaced 1939's emphasis on international interdependence and harmony. Under the chairmanship of Robert Kohn, the concept for the American Common, a Fair-generated project celebrating the diverse backgrounds of American citizens, emerged in concert with this dramatic shift in focus. (The American Jubilee extravaganza and Typical American Family contest were also conceived in part as a response to the new thematic mandate.) The Fair built the Common --essentially consisting of a band shell and an open area called the "Green"-- on the site left vacant by the massive Soviet Pavilion after the USSR declined to return for the second season. There, cultural and ethnic community groups were invited to mount events and programs, among which American-Italian Week and Negro Week were the longest and most elaborate. A highlight of American-Italian Week was a cross-country radio broadcast between the mayors of New York and San Francisco. Negro Week, hosted by Willie Bryant, featured exhibitions, recitals, religious services, speeches and a children's program. Speakers included W.E.B. Du Bois and L.D. Reddick, and musical talent included Benny Carter, Juanita Hall, Dean Dixon and Maxine Sullivan. The Green held dances and celebrations with multi-ethnic themes. Weekly square dances were especially popular. A Wall of Fame honoring notable American citizens of foreign birth wrapped around the Common perimeter. The records contain the correspondence of director Harvey W. Anderson with participating groups, as well as event schedules, program descriptions, research on Wall of Fame candidates, schemes to boost attendance, and Anderson's end-of-Fair report analyzing the Common's successes and failures. The American Common was sponsored in part by Sears, Roebuck, and Company.

Related collections:

Records of the Negro Week organizers are located in the New York Public Library's Schomburg Center, Manuscripts, Archives, and Rare Books Division.

A book of Wall of Fame honorees is located in the New York Public Library's Humanities and Social Sciences Library (Wall of Fame of the American Common, World's Fair of 1940 in New York).

VII.C.2. American Jubilee

8 boxes

The American Jubilee was a patriotic musical spectacle produced by the Fair for the 1940 season. Combining elements of circus, musical comedy and opera, the pageant celebrated events in American history, from Washington's Inauguration to the present-day election, with an applause meter registering audience preference for Roosevelt or Wendell Willkie. Records include the correspondence of managers Nick Holde, John Tuerk and Joseph Upchurch and producer Albert Johnson with performers, artists' representatives, staff and the general public. Production records include prop, wardrobe and cast lists, as well as the script, and the score by Oscar Hammerstein II and Arthur Schwartz. Casting files contain printed material from booking agencies, and inquiries, resumes and photographs from performers. Brief profiles handwritten during casting calls reflect elements of the backstage culture of vaudeville and popular theater of the period. Questions of discrimination surface in the casting and union contract files, including a letter from the Negro Actors Guild of America accusing management of engaging white actors to play black roles.

VII.C.3. Art Exhibits

15 boxes

The 1939 records document the stormy origins, development and management of the national arts competition and exhibition held in the Contemporary Art building. Largely procedural, the files include correspondence with many prominent American artists, national museums, arts associations and galleries. The purchase fund file includes short biographies of several artists. Publicity materials include a descriptive tour of the exhibition. An issue of the journal Parnassus features an article by department director Holger Cahill and a review of the Masterpieces of Art exhibit. The 1940 records reflect the activities of Olive Lyford, coordinator of art activities on the fairgrounds. The file on sculpture deals solely with the removal of work at the close of the Fair. For more on the evolution and administration of the Contemporary Art Exhibit see: Central Files--Construction, C1.0114 Fine & Applied Arts, boxes 150-162.

VII.C.4. Displamor

6 boxes

The Displamor Department was set up in January 1940 to sell advertising space in director Milton Reynolds' patented Displamor Machines, display cases with rotating shelves for showcasing merchandise and dioramas. The idea was embraced by Harvey Gibson as a potentially lucrative new revenue stream for the financially-strapped Fair Corporation. Reynolds and his staff designed programs and commissioned a field sales force to sell the idea to small businesses, service organizations and civic groups. Falling short of Reynolds and Gibson's ambitions, the machines were ultimately situated in just two Fair buildings, Communications and Food North. There, visitors were invited to rest comfortably in "Displalounges" where Displamor cases presented geographically or thematically-linked displays. The records include applications for sales positions, correspondence with exhibitors, manufacturers, service and trade organizations, transcripts of sales meetings, and sales training and motivational material. The Printasign file documents the original agreement between the Fair and Reynolds, as well as the evolution and aftermath of the program. Detailed correspondence between division managers and field representatives tracks sales progress and setbacks, and offers a window into sales practices of the period.

VII.C.5. Displays (Fireworks, Light, Water and Sound)

2.5 boxes

Under the supervision of John G. Lawrence, the Displays Department managed the operation of the public address and other sound systems at the Fair; ran the Democracy show in the Perisphere; and staged the elaborate fireworks shows in the Lagoon of Nations and Fountain Lake (renamed Liberty Lake for the 1940 season). The productions were technically complex feats requiring the mechanical synchronization of effects created by fireworks, lights, water, gas flame, and music. The 1939 Lagoon show alone employed two light operators, three water operators, four soundmen and a forty-four piece orchestra. Most of the records here originated in the office of Fireworks Director, Frank P. Duffield, and include correspondence with fireworks, lighting, sound and specialized equipment manufacturers, fireworks inventories and reports, cost projections, timesheets and wage schedules. The Lagoon of Nations file contains cue sheets for thematic music to accompany various displays. The corporate sponsor records document the department's campaign to earn revenue through outside sponsorships, and includes descriptions of set pieces featuring products, slogans and insignias. The Perisphere file contains a report recommending a script overhaul and mechanical adjustments to enliven the 1940 production of the Democracy show, as well as detailed instructions to ushers.

VII.C.6. Maritime Exhibit

1 box

Dissatisfied with the lackluster participation of maritime industries in the 1939 season, the Fair Corporation appointed U.S. naval captain Laurence N. McNair advisor for 1940. McNair had to tackle industry concern over the way the escalating war in Europe and the U.S. Neutrality Acts were shrinking business and dampening interest in Fair participation. For 1940, the exhibit was moved from the distinctive Maritime building at the edge of the Transportation Zone to the more centrally-located Communications Building. The Maritran Corporation, a collective of shipping concerns that included the Port of New York Authority, financed the exhibit design, construction and operation. Participants included shipbuilders and operators, leisure travel agencies, navigation schools, the U.S. Coast Guard and the Merchant Marine. The records largely represent the period leading up to the 1940 opening, and include McNair's correspondence with industry representatives, exhibitor proposals, space allocation plans, contract drafting documents, progress reports and organizational charts.

VII.C.7. Shelter Exhibits

24 boxes

The Town of Tomorrow occupied a plot of land on the Fairgrounds dedicated to the display of fifteen demonstration houses. The homes were designed to present a range of current modern and traditional architectural trends built with the latest in materials, methods and equipment. The concept, noted a staff member in a bid to draw industry participation, was to provide visitors with a glimpse into the possibilities for building homes in the immediate tomorrow. The Town also included a Domestic Utilities Building, featuring basement-related items such as boilers (the temporary houses could not accommodate basements). The records include the correspondence of directors C. Stanley Taylor, Jordan Hill, C.L. Lee and Edward F. Wilke with participating architects, decorators and manufacturers of building materials, appliances, furniture and other products. Demonstration home booklets provide house floor plans, promote sponsors and advertise products. Construction progress files include correspondence regarding the decision to drop six houses from the original plan (this change accounts for the gap in the house number sequence; later changes resulted in a discrepancy in house numbers between the first and second seasons). Otto Teegan's files include correspondence with architects, detailing the design and construction process. Exhibitor Participation records include the Fair's desperate (in its own words) appeals to entice companies to participate. This section also includes printed material advertising home materials and products. Publicity records provide descriptions and photographs of the Town of Tomorrow homes.

Finding the Town of Tomorrow homes lacking in the area of innovative interiors, the Fair launched a separate program to feature interior design for the 1940 season. America at Home was a juried exhibit of sixteen rooms created by prominent designers, decorators and architects. Special design-related programs and events accompanied the exhibition throughout the season. Records here include the correspondence of director Louise Bonney Leicester, associate director and designer Shepard Vogelgesand, and assistant manager Martin Oechsner with participating exhibitors, architects, designers, furniture manufacturers and jury members. The Designer and Craftspeople files include correspondence with designer Gilbert Rohde and the New York City Housing Authority regarding an exhibit modeled upon a room in the Vladek Houses, the first municipally-funded housing project in New York City. Exhibits, Programs and Events files include photographs of the interiors and information on events such as the Live Dinner Party, where visitors were instructed in proper dining etiquette.

VII.C.8. Sports16.5

The Sports Department maintained exhibits and hosted special programs in the Academy of Sport building and in the outdoor Court of Sport. These included a trophy, bronze shoe and baseball exhibit; baseball and football classes led by professional athletes, including Babe Ruth, Joe DiMaggio and Lou Gehrig; and contests for best sports cartoon and best sports photograph. The advisory committee, a group of influential editors, athletes and other sports professionals, played a significant role in departmental activities, with members securing top personalities for various programs. The committee was also responsible for choosing the winner of the Golden Laurel prize awarded to the year's outstanding amateur or professional athlete. Records include the correspondence of director Christy Walsh and assistant director J.A. Bihler with athletes, sports clubs, editors, photographers and fans. Additional materials include scripts of radio broadcasts, press releases, programs of events, clippings, financial records, and children's letters about the sports school for a promotional contest. The Motorcade files include photographs of Babe Ruth on parade and Ruth's signature on his personal stationery, which was used for reproduction on paper baseballs thrown to the parade crowd.

VII.C.9. World of Fashion

2 boxes

The World of Fashion exhibit was developed for the 1940 season in an effort to attract more female visitors to the Fair. Situated in the former Consumers Building, the exhibit sought to represent all aspects of the fashion and beauty world, with participants from the clothing design, textiles, cosmetics, accessories, fur, lingerie and millinery industries. Directed by influential fashion expert Mary Lewis, the World of Fashion featured daily fashion shows covering a range of subjects, from introducing rayon as the latest in textiles to showcasing coordinated mother-daughter outfits. In addition to exhibits, the group ran a theater and a restaurant. The records consist of the correspondence of Lewis and assistant Barbara Graves with manufacturers and merchandisers; scripts of fashion shows; theater programs; lists of articles received from foreign pavilions for the International Fashion Show; press releases and clippings; and expense accounts. Also Included are photographs of fashion models, action photos of "lightning dress creator" Alphonse Berge, and designs by students of the Traphagen School of Fashion.

Series VII.D. Labor Relations

6.5 boxes

The World's Fair site became a flashpoint for the internecine battles that were raging among labor unions in late 1930s New York. In an attempt to mitigate the effects of these struggles, the Fair Corporation established the Advisory Committee on Labor Relations, a group of influential labor leaders that included Matthew Woll, vice president of the American Federation of Labor; George Meany, then New York State Federation of Labor president; and Harry Van Arsdale of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. The Fair's Director of Transportation, Burnside Value, was appointed Fair liaison officer for labor relations. Value was assisted by Walter Hooke and John McInerny. But an April 1937 agreement with the Building and Construction Trades Council failed to prevent an onslaught of labor disputes. Between June 1937 and May 1939 there were 27 major strikes and work stoppages at the Flushing Meadow site. Serious labor issues continued to bedevil the 1939 season, one of the most vexing for the Fair Corporation regarding the status of native laborers brought in by foreign governments to work on their pavilions. Charges of sabotage and price-gouging by local unions led to vociferous protests, bad publicity and more limited government participation for the 1940 season. Harvey Gibson established the Department of Labor Relations in January 1940, with McInerny director and Hooke assistant director, and a period of "labor peace" was declared for the second season. Records include correspondence with union and government officials about the terms and conditions of agreements, reports on conditions at work sites, and newspaper clippings tracking the conflicts. The file on Strikes and Delays includes a timeline of pre-Fair disputes. More on Fair labor can be found in the files of the Legal Department: Labor Relations, box 1371, folder 3 and Central Files-Administration, A4.0 Labor, box 123, folder 1.

Series VII.E. Public Services

48.5 boxes, 13 volumes

The three units gathered under the heading of Public Services offered guidance and assistance to both staff and visitors to the Fair.

VII.E.1. Information Service

26.5 boxes

Established in November 1938 under the supervision of office manager Katherine Gray, the Information Service was comprised of the Telephone, Reception and Guide, and Correspondence units.

VII.E.1.a. Subject Files

3 boxes

These files include information compiled and disseminated by the Information Service, as well correspondence pertaining to departmental administration. The Exposition Greyhound file contains the text of a lecture delivered on the Fairgrounds bus tour. The Information Manual, used for internal reference and supplied to information bureaus and travel agencies, was compiled from responses to a questionnaire sent to Fair participants and administrators. The manual consists of brief entries on government and corporate exhibits, concessions, and amusements, as well as factual entries on subjects ranging from Fair financing to lighting design, and includes site maps, lists of regulations, admission prices, buildings, restaurants, and daily programs.

VII.E.2. Public Safety Department
 12 boxes, 12 volumes

The Safety Department maintained a uniformed and plain clothes police force as well as a squad of fire guards. Under the direction of retired Deputy Commissioner of the New York City Police Department John J. Sullivan, this unit was responsible for the protection of visitors and property, the prevention of crime, fire safety and the enforcement of all regulations pertaining to the Fair site. Together with Welfare Department social workers, the force also aided the sick and injured, assisted lost visitors, and was responsible for lost and unclaimed property. During the 1939 season, a mounted unit of Native Americans from the U.S. Government-run Haskell Institute of Lawrence, Kansas served as the honor guard and acted as military escort for all formal functions. Among the records that document the activities of this department are the correspondence, memoranda and reports sent and received by Sullivan, which capture information related to investigations and arrests stemming from drunk and disorderly behavior, theft, indecency, solicitation, racketeering, sexual abuse of minors and other criminal activities. Also included are reports of deaths on the Fairgrounds, notably those of two detectives who were killed when a bomb discovered in the British Pavilion detonated during removal. Personnel records offer sociological information on age, trade, marital status and language skills. A sampling of blotters of the police patrol and fire guard note roll call, patrol assignments and unusual occurrences; while the telephone logs - a record of incoming and outgoing calls to the Safety Department - suggest a typical rowdy day at the Fair.

VII.E.3 Welfare Department

10 boxes, 1 volume

The Welfare Department provided assistance to lost and stranded children and to mentally and physically disabled visitors, operated a housing service for employees, and coordinated accommodations for visitors through the Mayor's Housing Bureau. The department was also responsible for handling cases related to inebriated adults, delinquent minors, and prostitutes operating on the Fairgrounds, which were often referred to various area social service agencies. The office was staffed by social workers and a squad of policewomen who identified unsafe labor practices, assisted on cases related to minors, and who, in conjunction with the Amusement Control Committee, monitored areas of the Fairgrounds considered hazardous or unsavory. In addition, the unit distributed information promoting awareness of social work as a career and publicizing the Fair's welfare and health-related exhibits. Working with the National Youth Administration, the department produced a series of vocational pamphlets and arranged visits to the exhibits of various industry sectors for young adults. The records here include the correspondence of directors Henrietta Additon and Elling Aannestad, reports on the department's development and operations, and statistical and descriptive case summaries. During the 1940 season, the director of Welfare began submitting reports to the director of Public Safety for distribution as part of bi-weekly executive summaries and these can be found with the Public Safety Department Bi-Weekly reports commencing with the June 13, 1940 report. In documenting departmental activities, these records evidence the social service culture of the day, the highly developed social welfare system operating in the New York metropolitan area, and offer a glimpse into daily life on the Fairgrounds and into the broader social environment of the period.

VIII. Promotion and Development Division

303.5 boxes

The Promotion and Development Division was responsible for all aspects of publicity for the Fair Corporation. Dating from the bond sales campaign of 1936, the records document the heady ballyhoo of the pre-Fair period through the scramble to recoup losses after the financial failure of the 1939 season. From early on, the division's management and operational structures were in a state of nearly continual flux, each change marking a new attempt to establish greater oversight, reduce redundancy and commit to more vigorous promotional strategies. Division directors included Charles C. Green, Perley S. Boone (also director of Press), C.E. O'Neil and Claude Collins (also director of Motion Pictures). (See the Division Organization and Reports file [box 1880, folders 5-7] for details on the division's internal dynamics.) Grouped here under six headings based upon department of origin or area of activity, the records evidence the division's varied approaches to raising funds, engaging government and corporate participation, and attracting the public to the Fair.

Series VIII.A. General Administration and Operations

1 box

These records largely comprise the correspondence of directors C.E. O'Neil, Claude Collins and Perley S. Boone and Leo Casey. Other records include organization charts and reports attesting to jurisdictional confusion and divisional restructurings; statistics tracking worldwide print coverage of the Fair; and attendance surveys conducted by outside firms.

Series VIII.B. News Dissemination

232 boxes

These records, photographs and clippings document the activity and output of the division's personnel engaged in obtaining and placing print and media publicity. These groups issued a continual stream of textual and pictorial material to newspapers across the U.S. and internationally, as well as maintaining a press lounge to host visiting reporters. Director Perley S. Boone's news-oriented approach was eventually deemed counterproductive to Fair goals. Boone's replacement, Leo Casey, instituted measures to achieve faster, more flexible event publicity and to foster greater interdepartmental cooperation.

VIII.B.1. Articles

These articles were targeted toward specific industry sectors or written as exclusive features to run whole or in part in general and trade periodicals, and in special Fair editions of newspapers.

VIII.B.4.a. Collateral Advertising

6 boxes

Collateral Advertising was spun off from the Merchandising Department (see Central Files-Administration, A1.171 Promotion Department: Collateral Advertising Department (1939), box 55, folder 12). [hotlink] Under the direction of Beatrice Mabry and D. Alexander McQueen, the program's mission was to create free promotional opportunities for the Fair by tying its name, insignia, designs and themes to the marketing campaigns of department stores, news organs, manufacturers, service organizations, corporate exhibitors and others. The department authorized use and sometimes furnished copy and layouts for packaging, stationery, brochures, maps and other print material. Most of the examples included here were clipped from newspapers and compiled in scrapbooks by the Advertising Checking Bureau (ACB). Merchandise files include a catalogue of licensed Fair merchandise.

VIII.B.4.b. News Clippings and Periodicals

95 boxes

The Press Department maintained a clippings morgue. Staffers collected Fair-related articles from metropolitan area papers, contracting with outside services to cull a representative cross-section of daily press from a hundred newspapers across the country. Most of the articles from the pre-Fair period were taken from New York papers and arranged by subject by department librarian Robert Eaton. After the Fair opened, the morgue switched to a chronological system. Included are verbatim reprints of Fair press releases and promotional photographs; construction progress updates; pieces on celebrity visits, exhibits and amusements; special interest items from trade, professional and regional periodicals; reports on the impact of current events upon the Fair; and pieces on Fair labor and pricing practices.

VIII.B.5. Motion Pictures

4 boxes

Set up to facilitate newsreel coverage of the Fair, the department, directed by Claude Collins, quickly assumed oversight of all motion picture production and projection on the Fairgrounds. Departmental activities included producing and distributing promotional films and slide shows to schools and community groups; conducting a survey of films and film-related events; publicizing newsworthy opportunities; producing and assisting production of theatrical trailers, shorts and segments (by RKO-Pathé, Columbia and the "March of Time" series, among others); and promoting the Fair as a location for feature films (correspondence files include a process shot list for Alfred Hitchcock's RKO film, Mr. & Mrs. Smith). The department also acted as liaison for the Official Motion Picture concession, which held rights to commercial production and use of Fair footage. Correspondents include newsreel and film companies, amateur photographers and individuals proposing film projects. Other records include production and distribution documentation, film surveys, slide lectures and shooting scripts.

VIII.B.6. Photographs

The Photography Unit, which began its work documenting site construction progress, was responsible for shooting, developing, printing, captioning, selecting and furnishing promotional prints and layouts to newspapers, magazines and photo services, as well as to other Fair departments. Headed by picture editor Leo Pollock, the staff included a caption writer, chief photographer (who oversaw six others) and printers. Frequent subjects include aerial views of the Fairgrounds, the Trylon and Perisphere, murals and sculptures, exhibits, amusements, contests, performances, building dedications, celebrity visits, and the general public on the Fairgrounds and attending special events. Many photos feature Fair president and ubiquitous promoter Grover Whalen and New York City mayor Fiorello LaGuardia. The prints (largely 8 x 10 in.) are often identified on the reverse by serial numbers, which correspond to negatives (boxes 2419-2506). Access to the original prints and negatives is restricted.

Access to the prints will be provided via the Library's Digital Gallery. The more than 12,000 photographs are being digitized along with their captions. In the coming months, the categories and subcategories in the list below will be linked to the corresponding images. The links will function as the images become available.

VIII.B.7. Press Releases

18.5 boxes

The Press Department releases date from the Fair's incorporation in 1935 through the 1940 closing. Librarian Robert Eaton maintained chronological files of numbered releases, as well as a collection of special subject releases. Eaton's handwritten and typed indexes, found here preceding each run, include brief descriptions and dates. Some releases attach programs, schedules and transcriptions of speeches delivered at opening days and special events.

VIII.B.8. Radio and Television

8 boxes

Directed by John S. Young, the department coordinated all broadcasting activities for the Fair, fostered relationships with radio stations, operated the public address system, organized mobile sound units, lent engineering support to exhibitors, covered Special Days, speeches and dedications, and developed original programs. The records largely comprise Young and his staff's communication with industry professionals regarding programming and technical issues. Files include schedules and scripts, documenting the planning and production of, among many projects, a logistically-complex series of international broadcasts and a televised episode of the "Amos 'n' Andy" show. Progress and activity reports furnish summary descriptions of the department's work.

Series VIII.C. Public Education Department
 4.5 boxes

The Public Education Department was formed for the 1940 season by combining the departments of Science and Education and Children and Youth Services. Director Rudolph Kagey, along with an active advisory committee, concentrated the new department's energies on soliciting educational and community institutions to endorse the Fair as an educational laboratory. The department furnished slides and films to institutions nationwide, publicized the Fair's educational merits in the press, and offered discount rates to school and student groups. In addition, the department developed educational exhibits and operated the Little Theatre, which maintained a program of daily documentary films and special events. The records include the correspondence of Gerald Wendt (former Science and Education director), Rudolph Kagey and staff with public schools, universities, and other institutions. The Departmental Organization and Development file includes Wendt's detailed analysis of the 1939 program. Attendance Appeals provides examples of mailings targeted to special interest groups ranging from churches to agricultural associations. Exhibit summaries provide descriptions of many of the 1940 season's exhibits, amusements and services.

Series VIII.D. Public Relations and Publicity Activities

22 boxes

This series brings together records from the departments of General Promotions, Special Activities and Contests, among others. Material includes schedules and event calendars (program material is also located in the Information Service files- see: Public Services: Information Service: Subject Files, boxes 1832-4). Other records document the organization of Special Days and Weeks, which arranged group discounts and activities. Much of the promotional material prepared for Grover Whalen originated in the office of Daniel Maué, effectively Whalen's press secretary. (Whalen's speeches also appear in the Speeches section below.) Contest files document the Typical American Family competition, in which families selected from 48 states lived on the Fairgrounds for a week. Records include participating family photographs, biographical profiles and medical reports. Other contests represented in this section include Miss World's Fairest, a beauty pageant for Fair and concessions employees, and the Golden Key and Limerick contests, which gave away automobiles. Pre-Fair records cover promotional activities before the 1939 opening, including the official poster competition, dedication ceremonies, Fair-themed balls and traveling site models. The 1938 Preview and Motorcade files include designs and photographs of floats used in the Preview parade. Transcripts of speeches include those by Franklin D. Roosevelt on Opening Day; Grover Whalen honoring Mussolini at the Italian Pavilion; exiled Czech president Edvard Beneš at the opening of the Czechoslovakian Pavilion; J. Edgar Hoover speaking to the boy scouts on cleaning up political corruption; and Albert Einstein at the Jewish-Palestinian Pavilion opening. Prevalent speech topics were democracy, patriotism, and the European crisis.

Series VIII.E. Research and Library

44 boxes

Directed by historian Frank Monaghan, the Research and Library Department was established in June 1936 as a resource for Fair staff. Among other activities, the department operated a translation service and speakers bureau; initiated a publications program; conducted research on past fairs; and produced bulletins containing Fair facts. While Monaghan was forced to abandon his plan to write the history of the Fair, he successfully arranged to donate the Fair Corporation records to the New York Public Library. In the summer of 1939 the department's activities were absorbed into the Public Education Department. The bulk of records here were compiled or created prior to the Fair's 1939 opening.

VIII.E.1. General Administration and Operations

9 boxes

These records largely comprise Frank Monaghan's activities as director of the department. Included are progress reports and correspondence with publishers, authors, patriotic societies and educators, as well as letters from the public advancing proposals for special events and exhibits. Special Events files document the staging of a reenactment of George Washington's inaugural journey in the week leading up to the Fair's 1939 opening. Records throughout the series reflect the department's engagement with promotional matters, including its part in developing an attendance survey and in arranging for a promotional tie-in with The New Yorker magazine. Translating Service files include letters from European Jews anxiously seeking visas to the U.S.

VIII.E.2. Publications and Writings

5 boxes

These files reflect the department's role in handling requests to publish Fair-related textual and visual material; and in administering the Book Program, which put out Fair-sponsored materials, including Crosby Gaige's Food at the Fair, the Encyclopedia Britannica's Fairs of the Past--Fairs of Tomorrow (written by Monaghan), and the Official Guide Book. Other publications include investment promotional material and a pamphlet on cultural and educational aspects of the Fair.

VIII.E.3. Research

30 boxes

Consisting of printed material on an eclectic array of subjects, the general reference files were collected at the request and in anticipation of the needs of other Fair departments. New York World's Fair Background files --gathered by the department for Monaghan's ultimately-unrealized Fair history and intended to form the basis of the Fair archive-- pertain to the planning, design and execution of the Fair. Also included under this heading are autographed speech transcripts, menus, verse, and Monaghan's "Curiosa" file of letters with suggestions for unusual exhibits and spectacles. Other Fairs files include guidebooks, photographs and publicity materials compiled to provide Fair staff with comparative data and samples. Some of this material was gathered during Fair officials' visits to Cleveland's Great Lakes Exposition, to two Texas fairs, and to the 1937 "secret fair" in Düsseldorf. Many of the photographs, printed materials and reports on the 1937 Paris exposition were furnished by Thérèse Bonney, a publicist and photographer. (Additional Bonney material is available in the records of Central Files-Administration, A1.120 Secretary and Budget Director: Special Purchase or Payment Authorization, 1939 Nov 1 - 1940 May 31, box 26, folder 1 and Central Files--Public Relations, PR. Paris International Exposition 1937--Bonney, M. Therese, box 772, folder 2.) Other fairs well-represented here include the Golden Gate Exposition in San Francisco and the Chicago Century of Progress.

IX. Treasury

61 boxes, 13 volumes

The Treasury Division was responsible for all financial matters related to the Fair Corporation including funding of the corporation through issuance of bonds (debentures); preparation of budgets and forecasts; protection of corporate assets against loss and liability through the development and enforcement of insurance policies and plans; management of accounts and tracking of revenue and expenses; and keeping of records and books of account for the preparation of statements and audited reports.

Bayard F. Pope was appointed Treasurer of the corporation in May 1936 and served as a member of the Executive Committee, the Board of Directors and the Finance Committee. While the Finance Committee had general oversight authority over corporate finances, it was the Treasurer who was responsible for implementing the decisions of the Committee through the many programs and activities of the Treasury Division. In the discharge of these duties, Pope was assisted by the Financial Director and Vice President in Charge of Finance G. Vincent Pach, who supervised the daily management of the division.

Because the Treasury Division transactions touched on all aspects of the Fair Corporation, these records provide a useful vantage from which to mark the trajectory of the corporation, from its ambitious and optimistic beginnings through its anxious and fiscally unsteady final season.

Series IX.A. Office of Treasurer

18.5 boxes

These records, which document some of the Corporation's earliest affairs, were maintained by Bayard Pope in the fulfillment of his duties as Treasurer. Extensive information on the financial structuring of the Fair through the issuance of debentures is available in the Planning and Development files. A compendium of principal documents related to debenture sales brings together minutes, memos and published materials including pamphlets titled, "Financing the NYWF- A Statement Addressed to Business Leaders," and "The NYWF and What It Will Mean to Business." Efforts to court investors can be found in files related to the debenture sales campaign. Included is a draft presentation, which favorably compares the attendance forecast of the NYWF to actual statistics for Chicago's Century of Progress, offering confident predictions that the Fair would bring increased business to New York and its industries. Also here are legal opinions rendered on the ramifications of securing bank loans using capital raised through the debenture subscription. Correspondence, memoranda of law, and board resolutions related to financing the 1940 season chronicle the methods adopted by the Fair executives to avert corporate bankruptcy and partially recompense bond holders by extending the Fair for a second year. Finally, the changing financial health of the organization can be traced through the regularly-issued budgets, forecasts and audited reports that are included in these records.

Series IX.B. Office of Financial Director

16.5 boxes

All business related to the general fiscal administration of the Fair was performed under G. Vincent Pach's stewardship. Consequently, his records capture many aspects of the activities of the six departments and the dozen sub-units that comprised the Treasury Division. Included here is information on the preparation of statements and audited reports; the management of accounting activities; budget and expenditure analyses activities; the handling of gate and concessionaires' receipts; disbursement of payroll; and insurance coverage transactions. Though chiefly confined to financial considerations, correspondence and memoranda do occasionally yield information on matters related to legal, promotional and operational activities. Examples of this can be found in the concessions and exhibits files. These include a suit brought by Margaret Mitchell against the Gay New Orleans concessionaires for their unauthorized use of characters from Gone with the Wind in their Amusement-Area entertainment; abundant promotional material on the Boy Scouts of America, including a poster announcing an event featuring an address by J. Edgar Hoover; and correspondence from disgruntled Cavalcade of Centaurs producer John Ringling North, who takes Pach to task for what he construes as the general mismanagement of the Fair. Daily reports provide a detailed summary of the number of tickets sold, revenue and expenses, status of outstanding loans and the weather. Because fluctuations in the weather had implications for attendance and revenue, rain fall and temperature were vigilantly monitored; the insurance files address this topic in a careful analysis of the merits of obtaining rain and hail coverage. These files also offer accounts of instances of Fairgrounds fires and their associated claims. Revenue Control Specimen Tickets contain abundant samples of individual tickets and booklets issued by the Fair. In addition to standard admission tickets in a variety of colors, graphic motifs and denominations, these include tickets for specific exhibits, events and special days.

Series IX.C. Import and Export Department

18 boxes

The Import and Export Department handled all matters related to customs clearance for the importation of all goods used for construction, display and sale at the Fair.

Supervisor of Import Clearance J. Gerald Cole (later Director of Import and Export) coordinated all brokerage, entry and shipping activities. In order to facilitate the massive movement and tracking of goods, a centralized operation was established on site in the Press Building. A satellite office of the Port of New York's U.S. Customs Service was maintained with a full staff of entry clerks, liquidators and inspectors. The Fair's customs broker, American Express Company, and two trucking companies, the Motor Haulage Company and United States Trucking Corporation, also established outposts in the Press Building.

Working collaboratively with Cole and his staff, this team made all necessary arrangements for the receipt and clearance of 2,403 separate shipments of goods from 92 different nations for the pavilions of the 55 participating countries. These shipments, some valued in the millions, included a diversity of goods: exhibition trains from Great Britain and Italy; the stainless steel statue of the iconic worker that capped the Soviet Pavilion pylon; and elephants, snakes and orchids from countries in Asia, Africa and South America. Following the Fair, this department was responsible for the exporting of goods back to their countries of origin, a challenging task made more difficult by issues stemming from the hostilities in Europe and a Presidential order that froze all assets in the United States of invaded countries. Following Cole's resignation in April 1941, Herbert J. Slings assumed the duties of director to manage outstanding customs withdrawals and claims.

IX.C.1. General Administration and Operations

8.5 boxes

The bulk of these records consist of correspondence between Cole and foreign exhibitors, brokerage agents, customs administrators, shipping clerks and government officials addressing issues related to the clarification of rules and regulations, the preparation of documents, missing permits, and the bonding and liquidation of goods. Also addressed are legislative matters including duty-free shipment of articles for display or use at the Fair; the exemption of foreign wines and spirits from Federal Alcohol Administration Act provisions; and a special Act of Congress whereby foreign governments assumed liability for customs duties and charges, thereby relieving the Fair Corporation of this costly burden. Customs files yield information on the coordination of activities between the Fair staff and American Express personnel, and evidence the complications associated with the exportation of goods during the war under the Neutrality Act. The Customs Log records the countries and goods associated with each shipment, from the first entry in May 1938 (surveyors' tools from Belgium) to the last in October 1940 (silk wall hangings from Japan). Correspondence between the Fair and the Department of Agriculture concerns the securing of special permits and bonds through the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine to cover the importation of rare plants and trees. Additional correspondence on plant quarantine addresses shipments of tulip bulbs from the Netherlands. Finally, an article by Cole, "Abroad at Home," which appeared in American Import and Export Bulletin, offers a lively account of customs clearance operations at the Fair.

IX.C.2. Foreign Participation

9.5 boxes

These files include a sampling of the correspondence, memoranda, shipping and entry forms, bills of lading, and other documentation generated in the course of clearance activities. Exchanges between foreign representatives and Fair staff generally relate to missing documents, unpaid invoices, interpretation of rules and regulations, or the liquidation of shipments. Though incomplete, these records suggest the sophistication of the procedures employed to track the influx of merchandise and materials imported from foreign countries. Entry forms listing all goods imported for construction, exhibition, consumption and sale can be found with the dossiers. These inventories not only provide information on duties paid, net worth, dates of shipping and names of vessels, but through the range of materials -- from concrete to precious gemstone-- demonstrate in detail the building of the pavilions and exhibits by the foreign participants. [Note: Following passage of legislation in June 1939 permitting foreign governments to assume liability for customs duties, 1,500 entries were re-filed. As a result, dates on entry forms do not always reflect shipping dates. Additional information on this matter can be found in the Consular Invoice file. For accurate shipping dates, refer to the Customs Log.]

Series IX.D. Accounting Department Books

9 boxes; 13 volumes

Treasury Division books were kept by the Accounting Department, which prepared and issued statements and operating reports and managed the collection and disbursement of funds. The fourteen volumes offer examples of the type of books maintained by this department in the performance of these accounting duties. Information on costs during the formative months of the Corporation can be found in early expense ledgers and an invoice and voucher register. Separate payroll registers for male and female workers offer a means of comparing the differential in the rate of pay. A payroll register of the 1940 season includes pay for executive, weekly and hourly workers and records Grover Whalen's $75,000 annual salary, a 25 percent reduction of his 1939 pay. Finally, voucher registers from 1938-1940 charting daily disbursement of funds by amount and account, reduce the complex financial operation of the Fair to an enumeration of its discrete expenses.
